

Abstract:

Methods and systems for making an electro-optical device suitable for use in an image forming system are described. The device includes photosensors, which are covered by filter layers that sense the presence of colors in, for example, a color document. The methods and systems involve the use of an inter-filter layer that serves to smooth a top surface of the electro-optical device between successive applications of the filter layers.